DEATH, DESTRUCTION
MADE BY OHIO FLOODKnown Death Toll Rises To 171 As Rivers Boil
Higher in Area

SUFFERING IS INTENSE

30,000 Homeless in Conn.;
33 Dead in Vermont, New Hampshire, Mass.

Contradictory flood waters etched a cross pattern of death, destruction and suffering from the Ohio Valley to the Atlantic today. The known death toll rose to 171 as rivers boiled higher in some sections, and receded in others. Scores of missing, and the recovery of additional bodies was expected to raise the death toll to 200 by tonight.

Breaks of nature increased suffering, and in some instances danger rose early last night and today. Show-storms ranged west of the Allegheny and eastward.

A survey of the hard hit territories revealed:

Connecticut

Seven dead, 30,000 homeless, Connecticut River at 38 feet, and still rising. Hartford received the brunt of the flood. Power, communication and transportation paralyzed. National guardsmen reported bodies flowing through the business district. Profiteering business in candles and lanterns, as the city came through a night of darkness.

REV. H. W. OURSLER

Who participated in a world tour of the mission fields with the Rev. Donald Grey Barnhouse, has assumed pastorate of Cornwells M. E. Church.

CORNWELLS PASTOR
HAS TOURED WORLD

Rev. Howard W. Oursler Has Had Wide and Interesting Experience

EARNED HIS EDUCATION

CORNWELLS HEIGHTS, Mar. 21—The Rev. Howard W. Oursler, who has been assigned to the pastorate of Cornwells Methodist Episcopal Church, has had a wide and interesting experience during his short period in the ministry. His scope of activities has embraced a 14-months tour of the world as secretary to the Rev. Donald Grey Barnhouse, nationally-known radio preacher, the trip being made for the purpose of making a survey of foreign mission fields.

This young man, who at an early age, showed an aptitude for a studious life, left public school at the age of 13 years, and enrolled at a Philadelphia business college. At the age of 15 the business college employed him in its office, attention being attracted because of his unusual ability. For a period of four years he followed office employment.

After following business practices for a time, Mr. Oursler still showed a strong desire to follow the ministry, and became associated with Dr. Barnhouse in a secretarial capacity, which position he has held for the past eight years.

The young man attended evening classes at Central high school, Philadelphia, and while a student there attained the highest average of any student ever having enrolled in that evening school. He then pursued his studies further at the University of Pennsylvania, and had always been an honor student at that educational institution. The faculty at the University of Pennsylvania granted permission to the Rev. Oursler while he was still in his junior year, to make the round-the-world trip with the Rev. Barnhouse. In June of this year the Rev. Oursler will receive his A. B. degree at the University.

After leaving the pastorate of the Wilkison Memorial M. E. Church, where he had served from November, 1931, until April, 1934, the Rev. Oursler accompanied Dr. Barnhouse to mission fields in Hawaii, Japan, Korea, China, the Philippines, Siam, Burma, Indo-China, India, Arabia, Persia, Germany, France, England, Italy. The equator was crossed and stops made in Java, Bali and Celebes.

May of 1934 was spent in Honolulu and the other islands of the Hawaiian group, and in Honolulu the Rev. Oursler delivered some sermons. June was spent in Japan; July in Korea; August, September and October in China, where lengthy trips inland included thousands of miles, many sections being in portions where no railroads could be found; November in the Philippines, Dutch East Indies; December, Malay Peninsula, Siam, French Indo-China; January, February and March of 1935, India; April, Arabia and Iraq; May, Palestine and Syria; June and July, Italy, France and England; then the return trip to United States was made.

Since his return the Rev. Oursler has been requested to preach at numerous churches, speaking usually twice each Sunday.

The Rev. Oursler has been associated with Dr. Barnhouse in an administrative capacity for several years, acting also as his secretary. Mr. Oursler was licensed as a local preacher at his home church in Wisconsin at the age of 16 years. He preached during the time he pursued his studies. During his stay in Shanghai he also delivered a sermon over the radio in the course of an English hour. He also spoke in the Philippine Islands and in India, sometimes talking through an interpreter.

This was not the Rev. Oursler's first travel experience, he having traveled in connection with a Bible conference conducted on ship-board during a trip to Bermuda and Nova Scotia.

BRING YOUR HOME-MAKING QUERIES
TO THE COURIER COOKING SCHOOL;
OPENING SESSION TUESDAY EVENING

Nationally-Famous Culinary Expert Invites Every Woman
In This Vicinity To Be Her Guest at the Free Lectures In Bristol M. E. Church Lecture Room

As the plans for the Courier's big, free Cooking School are completed, the week's programs take on the scope of a gigantic homemaking undertaking.

A demonstration kitchen, a display of new homemaking equipment and furnishings, daily cooking lessons which encompass every phase of essential cookery—these are the highlights of the week. Mrs. Edna Riggs Crabtree is a brilliant speaker, whose experience includes many years of lecturing before women on every phase of homemaking.

She not only promises housekeeping news of the greatest interest to every woman of this vicinity but her generous contribution of recipes is one of the most appealing factors of her school. Every woman wants to surprise and delight the family with a new cake, a luscious new meat dish, a delicious frozen dessert. Dozens of such recipes are discussed and demonstrated at the Cooking School.

Because of the scope of the school and because Mrs. Crabtree is a lecturer and demonstrator of such wide reputation, and because the Cooking School activities are taking on such important proportions, many women to this section believe that there is to be a fee for the daily sessions. There is no charge whatsoever for any of the Cooking School activities. No tickets are required at the door. No admission slip of any kind need be presented. All that is necessary is to come early, find a good seat, and be ready when the lecturer walks out into her kitchen and begins her fascinating program.

Mrs. Crabtree has an excellent voice which can be heard all over the Bristol M. E. Church lecture room. She goes smoothly and quickly about her cooking in the kitchen for she has had a wealth of experience in homemaking in special training for her knowledge of foods, cookery and home appliances in all parts of the country. She brings this experience with her charm and good stage personality to this vicinity next week, in the great Courier Cooking School, one of the outstanding occasions of its kind in the community.

This School is planned in every detail for the housekeepers of this vicinity. The interest and co-operation of their shops, grocery stores, markets and other merchants have been enlisted, for Mrs. Crabtree knows that it is important to work with and de-

FIND WOMAN'S BODY;
DROWNED IN CELLAR

Mrs. Elizabeth K. Worman,
77, Riegelsville, Stricken
With Heart Attack

FELL OFF THE STEPS

The second flood victim in Bucks County was claimed yesterday afternoon when Mrs. Elizabeth K. Worman, 77, Riegelsville, was found drowned in the cellar of her home.

Bucks County Coroner, Dr. H. Clayton Moyer issued a death certificate attributing death to heart attack.

Mrs. Worman's body was found in three feet of water by her daughter, Caroline.

It is presumed that Mrs. Worman went to the basement to view the flood conditions due to the rising Delaware river forcing water into the cellar. It is thought that while on the steps the aged woman was stricken with a heart attack and fell into the water and drowned.

A pulmotor was used but without success.

High water in the Delaware river here at one o'clock this morning was lower than high tide of yesterday which was still lower than the peak-tide of the day previous which reached a mark of five feet and six inches.

The tide today was reported as running out rapidly and it was thought at the Bristol Water Works that the worst of the Delaware river flood was over. There was some concern over the rainfall during the night and there was speculation as to its effect on the height of the stream. The tide will be high again this afternoon at 1:28.

The body of James Mook, who was drowned in the flood waters around the bungalow of his uncle at Cornwells Heights, yesterday morning, was found at 2:30 yesterday afternoon. The body was recovered by Edward Hughes and James Wallace, both of Cornwells Heights.

Elect Officers To Serve
Women's Democratic Club

The following officers were elected at the weekly meeting of the Women's Democratic Club of Bristol Township: President, Rosa E. Parish; vice-president, Anna May Veit; treasurer, Sallie Bellerby; financial secretary, Mrs. Ralph Foster; recording secretary, Mrs. Ruth Siemone.

After business, refreshments were served, and music with dancing made the evening enjoyable.

LOCAL ORGANIZATIONS
ASK FOR CONTRIBUTIONS

Red Cross, American Legion and Legion Auxiliary to Aid Flood Sufferers

THE NEED IS GREAT

Four local organizations are appealing for funds to aid the flood sufferers in the stricken areas and donations of money, furniture, foodstuffs and clothing are requested.

The Bristol Branch of the American Red Cross urges contributions of money, so that assistance can be sent to those who are in need. These donations can be made to the Bristol Branch which in turn will forward them to the proper authorities. The appeal is signed by Mrs. Joseph Smith, local chairman.

Robert W. Bracken Post, No. 382, American Legion, and the American Legion Auxiliary, today addressed an appeal to the public for clothing, foodstuffs, and especially tables, chairs and bed clothing. Late last evening Commander Samuel Conklin, of the Robert W. Bracken Post, and Mrs. Dorothy Fechtburg, president of the Auxiliary, received telegrams urging that contributions be requested.

Both the Bracken Post and the Bi-County Council of the American Legion Auxiliary at once took action to contribute as organizations, and the Bracken Post voted $20 as a contribution to the general fund, while the Bi-County Council of the Legion Auxiliary contributed $30.

Donations of clothing, food-stuffs and furniture may be left at the Bracken Post Home, 619 Radcliffe street, or articles will be called for if request is telephoned to either the Legion Home, phone 9837, or Mrs. I. Johnston Hetherington, phone 2940.

The Joseph A. Schumacher Post, Veterans of Foreign Wars, are collecting canned milk, tomato juice, clothing, blankets, or any other useful articles, to be sent to the flood-stricken area.

Anyone who wishes to give in Croydon may take their articles to the Post home; in Bristol they may be sent to the home of the chaplain, Rev. Solla, 1506 Wilson avenue. The need is very urgent, and the Post would like to have the articles as soon as possible. Anything donated will be greatly appreciated by all concerned. One truck load is going up either tonight or tomorrow morning.

THE GREAT STABILIZER

(New York American, March 12, 1936)

The Supreme Court-baiters are long on larynx and short on FACTS. Their invariable plaint is that split decisions of the Court invalidate the importance of its work.

The Associated Press, however, whose business is FACTS, recently sent out these statistics:

Up to February 10, 1936, the Supreme Court Justices voted UNANIMOUSLY IN 102 OUT OF THE 121 DECISIONS MADE DURING THE CURRENT TERM.

THIS IS A UNANIMOUS RATING OF 84 PER CENT. In the nineteen dissents there were ten 6 to 3 decisions, five 5 to 4 decisions and two each of 7 to 2 and 8 to 1.

Therefore in 121 decisions of the Court there were only FIVE 5 to 4 decisions.

In 84 per cent of the decisions, which were unanimous, not even Justices Brandeis, Cardozo and Stone, who are generally recognized as a healthy minority influence on the bench, found anything about which to dissent.

If President Roosevelt had been only 84 per cent in agreement with his pre-election self, he would not have substituted for the Democratic platform on which he was elected the Socialist platform on which Comrade Norman Thomas ran.

It is the STABILITY of the Supreme Court that is irking the President and his ill-advisers.

It is the stability of the Supreme Court that is stabilizing the nation.

FORM COMMITTEE
TO PUSH CANDIDACY
OF THEO. GARDNER

Officers Are Chosen and Resolutions Adopted at Doylestown

THATCHER PRESIDENT

A Vice-President From Each
District In the County
Is Named

DOYLESTOWN, Mar. 21—The Theodore R. Gardner Primary Campaign Committee was organized here yesterday afternoon by the election of officers and the adoption of resolutions endorsing candidates and principles in the forthcoming campaign.

The Hon. Mark Thatcher, Perkasee, was chosen as president with the following as vice presidents: Gordon M. Luckenbill, Quakertown; Dr. John J. Sweeney, Doylestown; Mrs. Horace G. Reeder, Newtown; and Harry Lair, Morrisville. Oscar O. Bean, Doylestown, was selected as secretary-treasurer.

The following resolutions were adopted:

1. That the national issues confronting the American people make the approaching election one of the most vitally important in our history.
2. That under a Federal Administration that has violated every important pledge upon which it was elected, our Government at Washington has been transformed into a tax-eating bureaucracy, through which the substance of our people and the resources of the Nation are being dissipated with a prodigal waste never before witnessed.
3. That in the name of plain Relief, Works Relief and Farm Relief—for Rehabilitation, Rejuvenation and the achievement of "the more abundant life"—billions of dollars which must be repaid in the sweat and the sacrifices of every family in the land are being diverted to the indefensible purposes of partisan politics, through impracticable projects and money-wasting activities which cannot be justified upon any grounds.
4. That millions of the public funds have been spent for a continuous propaganda, the purpose of which has been to lull the people of this country into a false sense of security while the very foundations of the American Form of government were being undermined, and, but for the United States Supreme Court, would have been destroyed.
5. That under this Administration there has been a calculated, sustained and abortive misuse of the power of government, to curb free speech, cover opposition, and destroy the political freedom of American citizenship.
6. That the Democratic Administration has fulfilled every important pledge in the Socialist Platform of 1932, and has violated every important pledge made by it and the Platform on which it was elected in 1932.
7. That under this Administration the Constitution has been flouted.

SCOUTCRAFT MEET
PLANNED AT "GYM," EDDINGTON SCHOOL

Bristol, Cornwells, Edgely,
Newportville, Eddington,
Croydon Troops

ANNOUNCE SCHEDULE

Variety of Events Adds To The Program Which Is Sure to Attract

EDDINGTON, Mar. 21—The Lower Bucks District Scoutcraft Meet will be conducted in St. Francis School Gymnasium, here, on Monday evening. Troops in the communities of Bristol, Cornwells, Andalusia, Edgely, Newportville, Eddington, and Croydon, are planning to participate.

The events for the evening are as follows:

Scouts in either Event No. 1 or No. 2 can only be in No. 8.

Scouts cannot compete in any following event; other than Event No. 7, when they can compete in No. 8.

Event No. 1—"Rope Work": Two Scout Team (One hour time limit).

The team will have with sufficient sash rope to tie all of the knots listed on Pages 80, 81, 82, 83 and 84 of the Boy Scout Handbook. They will bring with them a plain, unfinished board one by three feet in size of any thickness to be used for mounting the tied knots. The team will need materials to fasten the knots to the board and for whipping the ends. All knots must be tied from memory without consulting any book or lists. The knot board will show the results of their efforts. They will be judged: 100 points for Arrangement (neatness); 100 points for Accuracy (the number of correctly tied knots); 50 points for Whipping the ends.

Event No. 2—"Cooking": One Scout Team (One hour time limit). Using a sterno outfit, a small pan with a lid, and a holder to lift out the egg; the contestant is to poach one egg. The judging will be on the basis of: 100 points for the form of the white part of the egg; 100 points for whether the yolk is soft; 100 points for the yolk being unbroken; 100 points for the salt being in the water.

Event No. 3—"Signaling": Four Scout Team (five minute time limit). The "One hand manual alphabet used by the feet" on Page 148 of the Boy Scout Handbook, will be the means of communication. This is something different, and will arouse new interest among the Scouts in a code that will permit conversation when the spoken word would be dangerous. Reader, Sender, Receiver (ears covered) who writes down the message, and gives it to the Messenger. While the Messenger is taking the message to the Judge for a reply, the former Sender covers his ears, and the Receiver takes off his ear covering. The Messenger on returning becomes the Reader, the former Receiver becomes the Sender, the former Sender becomes the Receiver, and the former Reader becomes the Messenger to take the final message to the Judge. Learning this code may be the means of a number of the Scouts being able to assist the deaf as they encounter them in later life.

Event No. 4—"Judging": One Scout Team (Five minute time limit). Five objects will be shown each contestant. They will not be allowed to "measure off" or "count up," any of the objects being judged. They may hold them in their hands if they wish. They will be scored on a percentage basis of how near to the correct answer they come. To be perfect they will have five hundred points. Objects include: 1st, Plank—number of square inches of surface; 2nd, Book—number of pages; 3rd, Pole—height in inches; 4th, Bag of sugar—weight in ounces; 5th, Distance between chairs—in inches.

Event No. 5—"Observation": One Scout Team (Three minute time limit). There will be ten articles hidden underneath a cloth on a table. The contestant is expected to identify them by the way they feel. He will have one minute to touch them. He will then go away from the table, and write down the objects.

Event No. 6—"Timing": One Scout Team (Two minutes). There will be a given distance of thirty or more feet. The Scout covering nearest to the distance in two minutes, wins. The distance to be covered will be given at the Contest. In some buildings, it may be necessary to have them go to a given point, and turn around to come back to cover the required distance.

Event No. 7—"Thousand Legger": Eight Scout Team. Team will line up "in file." Other than the No. 1 Scout, the other Scouts will fasten the front of their belts through the back of the belt of the Scout in front of them. They will go to the finish. Belts undone or team member falling down will disqualify.

Event No. 8—"Exhibition Drill": (Eight Minute time limit). Class A for Troops having eighteen or more boys on their roll as of March 1st. The team for Class A will consist of twelve drilling Scouts, one Leader, and one Commander.

BASEBALL'S CENTENNIAL

They say that baseball will be a hundred years old in 1939. For that reason, a resolution has been introduced in the New York State Legislature calling for an appropriation of $5,000 to be expended in an observance of the anniversary at Cooperstown, where baseball first parted from its ancestral progenitor, one-old-cat.

Just what form such a celebration could be given, we do not know. The resolution speaks of "a thorough study" of the first baseball game and of the "sport's growth" and of an advertising campaign which would "make baseball's birthplace a mecca for baseball lovers the world over."

Describing baseball as having a rightful claim to the title "national game," the resolution outlines the benefits to be derived from the game, including "excellent training of the minds and bodies, particularly of the youth of our people in keen thought and alert action." New York, it declares should be proud that not only has it the honor of being the first state in which the game was played, but it also has "the original diamond upon which this first game was played."

All of which, of course, is true. But there still remains the difficulty of staging a real observance of an event, the participants in which and the observers of which have long since passed away. To reset that first game would require a greater stretch of the imagination than is possible to the baseball masses of today. Besides, it might call for an impossible restraint on the bleachers with their present day habits of pop-bottle throwing, peanut crunching and hot-dog consumption.

HEROES FOR STAMPS

It is reported that the Postoffice Department, which has been getting plenty of revenue from special stamp issues, wants to bring out a series featuring army and navy heroes, but the plan has struck a snag because members of the Administration can't agree on the subjects. There is a hint of controversy over whether Robert E. Lee should be included.

Peace, as so often has been repeated, hath her victories no less renowned than war. Why not a stamp issue commemorating the heroes of peace? Again we plunge forward with a suggestion. Let a stamp be issued in honor of Brigham Young, who not only led his Mormons on one of the most heroic treks of history across the plains and deserts to Salt Lake City, Utah, but married at least 27 women, nearly all of them homely.

What this world needs is a few soul-stirring songs about paying taxes.

It is easy to recognize superior people. They are the ones who do not think about it.

Chivalry: An alibi man invented when he yearned to hit a sassy woman and did not dare.

There is no fool like an old fool, as the ancients said. The young fool is a different type.

After 57 years, a needle swallowed by a Western farm woman has emerged from her foot. Being impatient, she had gone ahead and bought another needle.

CHAPTER XXVIII

Von Guerdon looked at Juliet, his eyes glowing.

"If you married me I'd adore you forever and forever. You know I would."

Juliet took so long a pause for reflection that there was time for Von Guerdon, very calmly, to extract a fresh cigarette and light it. This, though, was to cover his nervousness.

Juliet probably settled her fate while he was blowing out the flame of his match. She was aware of a cool disappointment creeping over her. It did not matter much what her mind thought—the decision was made by an indescribable stagnation around her heart.

"I said I ought to marry you," she said, "or kick you out. Well, I'm going to do the thing that will please you least. I'm going to drive you out."

Von Guerdon did not move. "I thought you would."

"And I'm not going to talk this over with you again ever," Juliet went on, hurrying to get it over with. "It's settled—finally. I don't want to marry you because it would mean giving up the success I've found. Sorry if that sounds cold-blooded. It's not my fault—I can't help it. Outside of that, I adore you as a friend and I think you're one of the realest men I know."

Von Guerdon was on his feet. "Shall we say goodnight?"

"Yes, please."

Then, scarcely before she realized it, he was gone.

"We have settled it forever," Juliet told herself as she got ready for bed. "It's final. Finished. Yet somehow it makes me sad. He is a finer man than I thought—too bad he is unhappy. I'll go back to the Institute tomorrow and put all men out of my head. A splendid career is in my grasp. I must not miss it."

But it was not so easy, she found, to put men out of her mind. O'Hara, the next day, was again banging at the door of her thoughts and claiming attention.

"Look here, Juliet," he said, coming boldly into her office, "I acted pretty nabby-pamby last night, didn't I? Going to give me another chance?"

"How do you mean, another chance?"

It was a smiling O'Hara who faced her, his countenance cleansed of all surlines.

"To show you I can take a licking, I'm nauseated with myself for mooning around like a love-sick kid. You don't love me—and we'll let it go at that. I'm willing to be friends—and nothing more."

"That certainly clears the air," Juliet told him respecting the pride he showed.

"A man is such a jackass when he lets himself in for the role of heart-broken suitor. No more of that for me, thanks. Here's something that will help you forget my asininity."

On her desk he put a freshly arrived letter from the president of one of the largest chain stores in America.

It was miraculously encouraging. An invitation to the House of Hubert to participate in a discussion looking toward a yearly contract to supply an enormous quantity of beauty preparations.

"For some time," read the letter in part, "we have been looking for a connection with an established firm capable of producing these articles in the quantity we require."

"We feel that Madame Hubert, already occupies an established position in the field, even though there are larger firms. These we seek, however, are reluctant to go into quantity production for the tent-cent store trade."

"This we consider false pride and poor business. Your overtures to us looking towards the purpose we have in mind come at a very happy time."

"We are in a position to handle a complete line of skin tonics, cleansing creams and lotions, skin foods, protective creams, rouge, powder, lipsticks, eye shadows, nail polishes, bath salts, perfumes, hair preparations and other requisites."

Juliet was unable to reach Gottlieb by telephone until after five in the afternoon. When she told him the news of the New York letter, he sprang alive with excitement.

"That letter's a million dollars dropped right in your lap!" he cried. "We'll telegraph them—no, we'll use the long distance. Wait! Maybe we'd better grab a plane and fly."

"But we aren't in a position to negotiate yet," Juliet objected. "We'll have to consult McSpadden about increased production, and cost."

"Yes, yes, that's right," agreed the little man, putting the brakes on his eagerness. "But it is staggering, isn't it? I'll tell you what, Juliet—we better get together tonight. I didn't really expect such big results in a hurry. We'll have to put our heads together. No use dilly-dallying the handle—"

Juliet's head was swirling dizzily

"We would require these materials in wholesale quantities and would cooperate in a campaign to establish them under a distinguished trade name, if given exclusive rights in our own field."

"We would suggest these articles be offered in artistic bottles, vials and packages of signal design. We intend to merchandise this line at a very small profit, but in such large quantities that it will pay us to put our full energies behind it."

"Of course, before we enter into any contract we must open negotiations in detail. May we suggest that you send one of your partners to New York with authority to sign such a contract, provided we agree upon terms."

"Frankly, we are tremendously interested and would appreciate immediate action on your part."

That was the first tangible result of Juliet's inspiration. A triumphant sensation, vigorous and intoxicating took possession of her—a teeming exhilaration of power and energy rushed new color into her face, a new sparkle to her eyes.

After so many fruitless attempts, she realized, she had lifted herself above the entire herd of struggling career-girls.

"Do you want to go to New York?" she asked O'Hara buoyantly.

He began to laugh at the excitement she could not conceal.

"It is a thrill, isn't it? But I'm not going to snatch your laurels away, Juliet. I think you ought to go personally. It was your inspiration that opened up this field. Why don't you go back and grab the contract yourself?"

Just for an instant she had a swimming delight at the picture of herself sitting in conference with big Eastern executives and carrying off a victory that would be sensational.

"Oh, I'd love it!" she exclaimed, her whole face alight.

Yet, as she spoke, her sane voice of wisdom began a still small argument that could not be ignored. It said to her that she was, after all, just a girl, and not a hardened and crafty business man.

In the matter of contracts and negotiations and technical production figures she was alarmingly ignorant. She might inspire a great project, but it required a hardened business man to put it across.

The Eastern capitalists would become instantly skeptical if they had to do business with a girl whose inexperience they would soon discover. No, it would have to be an older and wiser person—

Juliet tried to down these warnings but they persisted. It was, indeed, a wrench to forego such a spectacular coup. Even the thought of its elevated her like champagne.

The battle was between wisdom on one side and her feminine vanity on the other.

"Oh, I don't know what to say," she confessed, flushed and excited.

"I'd love to go—yet I really don't. Perhaps we could both go together—doesn't that make your head whirl? I'll tell you what—you come up to my house for dinner to-night and we'll talk it over. It's the most important thing that's ever happened to me in my whole life."

Juliet was unable to reach Gottlieb by telephone until after five in the afternoon. When she told him the news of the New York letter, he sprang alive with excitement.

"That letter's a million dollars dropped right in your lap!" he cried. "We'll telegraph them—no, we'll use the long distance. Wait! Maybe we'd better grab a plane and fly."

"But we aren't in a position to negotiate yet," Juliet objected. "We'll have to consult McSpadden about increased production, and cost."

Juliet's head was swirling dizzily

with huge figures. A million dollars! That's the sum Gottlieb named. He gets twenty per cent of that, she computed mentally, and I get half of it. A hundred thousand dollars for her own share!

It was a glorious unbelievable dream. She found herself trembling and pressed her palms to her hot temples.

This daze was still upon her when she returned home with O'Hara. Katie, preparing dinner for them, knew that something important was in the air. The presence of O'Hara, just as a single factor, was enough to set everything revolving for Katie. The whole apartment, from the moment he entered, seemed filled with golden lights vibrating rapidly.

In this state of mind she began burning lamb chops and opening cans of watery corn and peas and asparagus. The animated conversation from the living room reached her in snatches and meant nothing.

Their conversation, Katie gathered, concerned nothing but stupid and unintelligible business.

"Believe me, I wouldn't waste my time talking business to him!" she told herself, wistfully.

He's going to stay for dinner, she realized, and maybe he'll notice what a pretty girl I am. I really am beautiful—I am! I am! I'm terribly in love with him. It's just like a motion picture, I could throw myself in his arms and it would be heaven!

She slipped into her bedroom and did a number of things to her face with a black pencil and a small pink puff and a lipstick. With a comb she caressed her bright hair.

Facing sideways, she managed to glimpse her profile, a chiseled regularity, fresh and clear as porcelain, and never a trace of the surgeon's knife that had removed every defect.

She stood up, a diminutive figure of tender curves and flat youthful surfaces. Girls with such faces and forms are dancers in vaudeville and always peel off their clothes to be photographed. Katie bestowed a ravishing smile upon her own reflection.

Returning to the living room, she brought a crystal box of cigarettes to O'Hara.

"Have one?"

"Thanks, Katie." Only that. She went back to the lamb chops and opened the kitchen window to let out some of the smoke. He was not indifferent—just busy with that absurd business. Another voice was raised in the living room—that old and utterly meaningless Gottlieb, probably they'd keep up their silly talk for hours.

The table ought to be set, Katie supposed. There was a whole skilletful of the lamb chops.

Set a plate for Juliet and one for each of the men—that made three. Juliet probably wouldn't mind if Katie set a plate for herself, too. Why not? One thing about Miss Rankin—she never made a girl feel like a servant. More like a companion.

Four plates went on the table in the dining room. She would sit next to him, watch him eat, pass him things. Sooner or later he would have to notice her.

She put her shining head into the living room. "Dinner's served."

Gottlieb was talking a blue streak.

"Then it's decided. I'll go East myself. Believe me, I can handle those fellows back there—used to be in the wholesale business in New York myself. Their letter's very friendly and all that, but they'll tear your heart out over a tenth of one per cent. I'll give you all the credit on earth, Juliet—but you haven't the experience to get in and battle with those sharpshooters. Right, O'Hara?"

"I'm afraid so," admitted O'Hara. "And I know so," said Juliet heartily. "You've demonstrated your business ability in so many deals, Mr. Gottlieb, that I know you can handle this one far better than I could. They'd probably get me so confused I'd sign any contract they'd put in front of me."

ed, and there has been systematic usurpation of the powers of the States and the rights of their citizens.

That while this Administration has missed no opportunity for chest-thumping protestations of its concern for the American wage-earner—and for political purposes has resorted to practices unworthy of any government, in efforts to alienate the worker from his employer—the facts are that under a treaty-making power delegated to the President by a spineless Democratic majority in Congress, there has been effected during the last year and a half a substantial downward revision of the tariff; and at a time when our workers need every job that can be created, the country is being flooded with foreign products, millions of American dollars are going into foreign wages by way of consumption of these imports, thousands of American jobs have been turned over to workers in foreign countries, entire American industries are threatened with extinction, and their labor with permanent unemployment. Proof of these statements is to be had in the Government's own figures, which show that during 1935 our imports of foreign products were 24% greater than in 1934; while sales of our own products to foreign countries were only 7% greater in 1935 than in 1934.

That out of these and related policies have come the following results: a national debt increased by 13 billion dollars and steadily climbing; the creation in three years of a tax-burden which cannot be lifted by the most terrific sacrifices of the next three generations; recovery retarded by oppressions, prejudices, antagonisms and the uncertainties generated by costly and impractical experiments; unemployment approximately at the same figure as when the New Deal's 13-billion joy-ride began—and one-sixth of the entire Nation on a dole.

10. That the New Deal in Washington has its counterpart in the present Administration at Harrisburg, and that the policies of both constitute a challenge of the people by Government, which only can be met by and through the Republican Party.

With these facts before us, we congratulate the Republican leadership throughout our State which dedicated itself to the public demand for the energy of young manhood, combined with established integrity, experience and efficiency, in the Republican candidacies of this contest, and which lent its influence to a harmonious concentration upon Mr. E. Arthur Sweeney, publisher, of Greensburg, for the Republican nomination for Auditor General, and Frank L. Pinola, Esq., lawyer, banker and former State Commander of the American Legion, of Pittston, for State Treasurer.

We pledge them our enthusiastic and unqualified support.

We are cognizant that the major problems which confront the Nation today are problems of legislation which rest with Congress and which in many instances will require adjustment over a period of years.

We believe, therefore, that not only popular desire, but every dictate of wisdom, demands that the Republican Representative in Congress from the Ninth District shall be a man meeting every test of ability, intelligence, integrity and party loyalty, and whose age gives him a life expectancy which would enable him, with continuing service, to live out the settlement of these crucial and intricate problems, and who would at the same time, by reason of seniority, become able to speak for his constituency and his State with increasing influence in the national law-making body.

Consistent with this concept of the situation before us, we hereby endorse the candidacy of Theodore R. Gardner, Esq., of Emaus, Lehigh County, for the Republican nomination for Representative in Congress from the Ninth Congressional District, embracing Bucks and Lehigh Counties.

And in pledging Mr. Gardner our unqualified support, we commend his candidacy to the Republican electorate of our own County and of the District as a whole.

Need Co-operation In Safety Drive

enforcement of the safety codes, Secretary of Labor and Industry Ralph M. Bashore having ordered state inspectors this year to redouble their efforts to cut down the number of industrial accidents.

Mr. Nicaise said:

"True enforcement cannot be secured unless the co-operation of industry is secured. Under other conditions than this enforcement is merely a police job. Enforcement of codes for the purpose of preventing accidents is a co-operative proposition between industry and the Department with the Department as the director of the work and industry's advisor."

"To better understand this we must analyze the types of employers with which the Department must work. The first of these is the one who realizes the value of the safety codes of the Department in that they serve as a guide in determining what machines should be guarded and what processes should be changed to eliminate certain hazards. This type is absolutely 'sold' on safety and is willing to abide by and carry out the provisions of the safety codes because it is good business to do so and because he knows that the procedure under which the codes are developed insures that they were reasonable and necessary."

"Enforcement in such cases is of course secured entirely through the employer himself with advice from the Department, instead of by activity on the part of the Department alone."

"The second type of employer to be considered is the one who either has been fortunate enough not to have many accidents of a serious nature, or has not had the subject of accident prevention presented to him in such a way that he sees the dollar and cents side of the movement. This type of employer does not carry out the provisions of the codes on his own initiative, but waits until the inspector arrives and makes recommendations. He is very reasonable in his attitude and complies with the recommendations without any murmuring. He simply desires to be shown and if approached in the right way and encouraged, will soon turn into the first type mentioned and carry out the provisions of the code on his own initiative."

"Employer number three, who fortunately is far in the minority, is the type which requires the use of the big stick before he carries out any of the provisions of the safety codes. He is the type that usually looks upon the inspector as an intruder and his recommendations as a raid on his treasury instead of as a friend and profit maker. Many of this type delay in complying with the recommendations until they are brought into court by the Department and fined. Such action is the last that the Department desires to take, but in many cases it is necessary. Other employers in this group abide by the recommendations only because they know that failure to comply will bring drastic action."

Class B for Troops having seven or less boys on their roll as of March 1st. The team for Class B will consist of eight drilling Scouts, one Leader, and one Commander.

The Scouts in both teams must have been under eighteen years of age at the time of their District Meet.

The above arrangement is being made to make it possible for the small Troop to compete in all events. It will not affect the scoring.

The teams are expected to properly execute all of the commands as given in the Boy Scout Handbook on pages 96 and 97. The Commander will give the preliminary command, and it will be repeated by the Leader. The Commander will give the command of execution, and it will be repeated by the Leader.

A personal inspection of all parts of the required equipment of uniform, and insignia, will be made. The Leader and Commander will be carefully checked on his leadership.

The inspection will include: all official equipment—Stockings, breeches, belt, shirt, neckerchief, slide, knot, hat with string, insignia of rank (Jr. A. S. M., S. P. L., P. L., or A. P. L.), metal insignia of advancement, cloth insignia of advancement, community strip, troop numeral, patrol medalion, buttons missing, and buttons undone.

BRISTOL A. A. READY TO SIGN LOCAL PLAYERS

The Bristol A. A. Baseball Club has reorganized for the coming season under the management of John Mulholland and the team will play independent ball, scheduling games away on Saturdays and at home on Sundays. Games are to be booked with teams from New Jersey and Pennsylvania.

Leedom's grounds will be put into first class condition and the second Sunday in April is set as the opening date. All players desiring to sign with this club are asked to communicate with Mr. Mulholland who states that local players are to be given preference over out-of-town players.

The team will report for the first practice on the first Sunday in April.

and the Bucks County Rescue Squad all grappled for the body.

Moock came from Wyndmoor, Pa., on Monday to visit his uncle, Joseph Moock, who resides in a bungalow at the rear of the Schutte & Koerting plant. The flooded Delaware sent water into the bungalow and Mrs. Moock and her children went with friends. Mr. Moock and his nephew continued to stay at the bungalow despite the fact that the first floor was under water. The 19-year-old youth was alone yesterday morning when his cries for help were heard and he was seen struggling in the water.

Yardley's water supply was cut off yesterday and farmers took drinking water to the stricken residents.

Morrisville was left in bad shape by the receding floodwaters. The home of Anthony Piclick on Central avenue was toppled from its foundations and others were twisted about by the swift rush of water. Sidewalks had caved in and streets were torn with huge holes.

Few bridges were open to traffic between Trenton and Phillipsburg. Several are in immediate need of repair and engineers began a survey to determine the extent of damage to others.

After a hurried trip through the flooded Bucks county area along the Delaware River, Dr. Claude L. Taylor, Bucks County Medical Director, and H. M. Freeburn, of Philadelphia, sanitary engineer for the State Department of Health, held a conference with authorities in Morrisville, Yardley and other sections and decided to issue a warning through the public press to boil all drinking water in the flooded area.

"This precaution of boiling drinking water should be taken by every resident of the flooded area for at least two weeks," Dr. Taylor said today at his office in Doylestown. "Unless the water is boiled there will be a typhoid epidemic, we are quite sure. I hope that everyone will co-operate."

Residents of the Delaware Valley section between Ringelaville and Morrisville started to salvage the debris and wreckage this morning after two days of flood water that reached the highest mark in thirty years. Not before tonight will the River Road between Kintnersville and Morrisville be any where near clear of flood water, although at noon yesterday the river had receded close to 11 feet, according to measurements at New Hope. It will take a week or more to clear the debris from the River Road and make it safe for travel from one end to the other.

Hundreds of heavy guard rail posts and long stretches of cable wire was washed away. All this will have to be replaced to make driving safe.

Telephone poles were undermined and will have to be reset before normal telephone service will be restored to the Point Pleasant section.

It was officially reported at the New Hope-Lambertville bridge yesterday that the river had receded to a depth of 16 feet. Technically, the measurement showed the river was falling at the rate of 20 points an hour. At the same time this morning the water in the rear of the home of Dr. John A. Flood, New Hope dentist, had receded back to the river wall behind his property after being spread out 75 feet toward the front of his home.

WPA workers in New Hope were assisting volunteer firemen to pump out cellars and clean up in general. Row boats were removed from the Main street section but it still looked quite dismal in the "Waterloo" section, where homes were badly flooded and house foundations undermined in several places.

Damage to the Union Mills Paper Mfg. Co., at New Hope, was not as great as many believed it would be. One of the officials of the firm stated this morning that the 80 persons on the payroll were back in the plant today, "cleaning up the mess" left by the high water. The men are cleaning the first floor today. None of the machinery was badly damaged. The cellar was still filled with water. The only real damage suffered by the company was the loss of the truck garage, which was practically wrecked by something that put a large hole through it.

Point Pleasant breathed a sigh of relief as the residents of the village saw a chance of receiving daily newspapers and mail for the first time since Wednesday. Water had disappeared from the River Road and the Tohickon Creek had receded somewhat. The restaurant of Mrs. Louise Blair, Point Pleasant, partly submerged yesterday, was clear this morning and the scene of a general house cleaning party.

Upper Black Eddy homes suffered considerably. Hundreds of dollars' worth of shrubbery was ruined. Sheriff Horace E. Gwiner, who has been in Upper Black Eddy district for two days, said this morning that the river was about 2 feet higher than it was last week when a heavy ice flow caused the initial damage of the season.

Ferman Lerch, well known resident of the Smithtown section, told today that the river had dropped 50 inches at 7:30 this morning at Smithtown, and that the high water mark was 22 inches or more than last week's high mark. One bungalow on the Cooper tract across from Joseph Aaron's property was under water, all but two feet, and another nearly was under water all but one foot from the eaves.

Residents who have been organized and working steadily for the improvement of the Delaware Valley section, including the restoration of the canal through the picturesque artists' colony, were very much down-hearted when interviewed. Their hopes have been practically wrecked together with the canal, and chances now seem slim to have the canal restored this Summer unless a WPA project on a large scale can be approved for the flood-torn territory which is far less populated than the territory hit worst by the flood in the Johnstown and Pittsburgh areas.

A bird's eye view of Lumberville from the top of the hill in the rear of the residence of William Tinsman, lumber dealer, afforded the most striking picture of the entire flood area between Easton and Trenton. Lumber worth thousands of dollars piled high before the flood, was knocked down and floating around wildly on Lumberville's main street, the River Road. Precautions taken before the high water arrived, prevented the lumber from getting away, but all of it was badly water-soaked. Hundreds of dollars worth of cement was ruined in the Tinsman lumber yard. Water was more than six feet deep along the River Road in front of the office of the Tinsman yard.

which has come out this year for kitchens.

The dishes cooked each day at the School will be given away and there will be free, filled market baskets; through the courtesy of some of the local merchants a number of gifts which are much more substantial and valuable will also be given away.
